From the Desk of

Laverna Truitt

Boone County Genealogical Society President

The activities over the past several weeks have given me much to record and discuss with others.

On May 29, 2004, Larry and I traveled to Winchester, Kentucky to celebrate my brother's 50th birthday. My sister-in-law had called to ask me if I would write a "This is Your Life" story about him. After talking with my five sisters, I was able to fill about six pages of activities that took place before and since he became a member of the family. By the way, he is the youngest and the brother of six sisters.

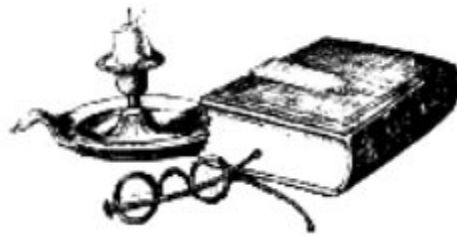

By the time I had finished the essay, it was a biography of our family. His wife and three children did an excellent job of keeping it a secret. He was shocked and amazed by the celebration as well as all the friends and family who were there. I hope to hold on to the memories of that day for a long, long time.

The following day, Sunday, May 30, 2004, our youngest grandson celebrated his first birthday. I can still see his little chubby cheeks, his eyes and hair covered with chocolate cake and ice cream. The entire experience was just a little too much for him and he fell asleep in Grandpa's arms before everyone had gone home.

The next day, May 31, 2004, our 36th wedding anniversary, Larry and I left for Branson, Missouri -- our favorite place to vacation. Larry listened to his bluegrass tapes and CD's and I read a book. We stopped every few hours; we made small talk and just enjoyed the ride. The days spent there were relaxing and enjoyable but we were happy to get back home.

My daughter-in-law, Ginger Truitt, along with her three children and sister, made the trip to Washington D. C. to watch as the caisson carrying former President Reagan's body moved through the streets of the city to the Capital Building. She wanted her children to witness a part of history that occurs very little throughout a life time. How I enjoyed listening to her tell of their exciting days spent there!

Now the reason I am writing all of these things down is because it is so important to record life experiences. Keep a journal or diary. If you can't write things down, record them on a tape player. Our experiences are stories that others want to hear about. When I was researching information about my brother, I found out things I did not know. Keep everything you can that would be of importance to someone else. Do not allow a person's memory to die even though they may no longer be living. When a grandchild says, "tell me a story about when my daddy when he was little and his favorite doggy", do not hesitate. Give every little detail and make it good!

Note: The story of Ginger's account to Washington D.C. will be in this week's SUNTIMES.

THAT HEAVENLY MUSIC

Submitted By
Robert Lee Gillan

In 1796 a large parcel of Kentucky Territory was surveyed of and called Warren County. The county name was taken as a memorial to the memory of medical doctor in George Washington's Army. General Warren was such an ardent supporter of the cause for independence that he led the charge with his continentals to retake Bunker Hill from the British red Coats entrenched there. The effort was a success but Warren received wounds that caused his death in the field. As he lay dying his orders and encouragement inspired his fellow countrymen to eventual success. When these soldiers received bounty land warrants after the Revolution, they came to Kentucky to claim their parcel of two hundred acres. Most of these men were of Scotch or Irish decent and named their county seat, Bowling Green, after their favorite summer pastime enjoyed in their homeland.

In 1798 another group noticed how large the area was that made up Warren County. This group proposed to carve off a goodly portion of Warren and make it into a new county. The Cherokee Indians and the vast population of deer were giving the newly established settlers a great amount of trouble. All of the newly planted patches of corn were soon clipped off level with the newly cleared ground. Some of this newly chartered county was a sea of grass or thinly populated with a scattering of trees, but much of it had thick stands of great hardwoods.

These settlers set out to change this. They staged the great log rolling of all time. By starting at the outside border of the county the woodsmen worked their way toward the interior of the county. Enough logs were piled to build a cabin and a barn and the rest were burned. This did away with much of the Cherokee and the deer problem. The name for the new county was Barren County. To suit the Scotch taste the county seat was called Glasgow.

In 1799 during the first year of the log cabin county courthouse, my great-great grandfather John Gilliland recorded his marriage to Betsey Wilson. John had walked with a small party from North Carolina to determine extent of the opportunities in Barren County. He soon set up a blacksmith shop and a woodworking shop where he attended to the needs of the horses and the repairs for implements as well as the business of casket making. John and Betsey raised thirteen healthy children. I am descended through his son David Crockett Gilliland and his son John Thomas Gilliland.

All of these generations were farmers, but they were also clever as craftsmen, hunters and fishermen. All of them had a very serious weakness. They loved foxhounds and fox hunting.

Heaven help a neighbor in that day that would even dream of killing a fox. They wanted to see if they could create a breed of hunting dogs that could out run and out last any fox that they were trailing.

Soon after John was established in his blacksmith trade a banking family by the name of Trigg opened a bank in Glasgow. One member of this family was completely obsessed with foxhounds and fox hunting. He was Hayden Trigg and was blessed with enough financial backing that he sent back to his native Ireland for breeding stock. When these hounds were tried out over the terrain of Barren County, Mr. Trigg and his interested group decided that they were to tall and did not have the stamina to bring a local fox to bay. They set out to develop a foxhound of their own design. They wanted a smaller dog of a compact form with the usual colors of red and white, and one of extreme cunning and endless stamina.

To attest to their success in this venture one must enter the west door of the Barren County courthouse into the great hall and look to the right wall at the fox hound memorial. There on a great bronze wall plaque is a likeness of the Trigg Hound and the story of its development. Hayden Trigg was and is a greatly loved and revered Barren County pioneer. The county sheriff for many years was Joseph D. Curd who had teamed with the Trigg family on this project of developing a new foxhound. My grandfather, John Thomas Gilliland was in this group as well. It fell his lot to test these hounds rigorously on the hills of the surrounding area.

Often it developed that many of the best offspring of these hound matings were not the right color of red and white. Rather than do away with these pups they were given to fellow-hunters to be used for hunting only. John Thomas Gilliland acquired two of these off-color pups that turned out to be excellent hunters. One was named Burley. He was far too large to be kept as a breeder. The other was just the right size but her color was black and white. John named her, Bluebird. Both of these dogs were great fox hunters. Everyone in the area wanted to run their hounds with those owned by John Thomas Gilliland.

In a few years the American Kennel Association recognized the Trigg Hound and recorded it in their registry of almost three hundred established breeds.

John was a proud man of limited finances, but he was so deeply appreciative of the dependence and trust put in him by Hayden Trigg that he named his first son, Hayden Trigg Gilliland. When John's second son was born he named him Joseph D. Curd Gilliland. John and his three sons, Hadie, Joe and Charles or "Slim" as he was called, lived and worked all day on tobacco farms, in sawmills and in licensed whiskey stills, but when the sun went down it was time for a chance to run the dogs. They were fed and taken to a meeting point where the others had gathered. When all was in readiness the chase was on. A fresh trail meant early music and as the pack closed up on the heels of the fox this early music turned into what these hunters called "Heavenly Music."

Often these country folk enjoyed taking a visitor with them on a chase. Each hunter always enjoyed hearing his own hounds running with the pack as they tried their voices together. Many chilly Kentucky night were enhanced by the singing of a pack of foxhounds.

It was not only sweet music to the owners; it was "Heavenly Music".

As the area around Barren County began to be more occupied by settlers, the preachers, churchmen, ministers and missionary folk began to join the farm families to help them to organize tent meetings, conversions, baptizings in the millponds and places where they could meet and worship god. Often farm folk would come in a wagon with food for their family and animals and stay for several days to enjoy the singing and preaching. The old saying or expression of "all-day singing and a dinner on the ground" had a special meaning to these rugged people.

At these tent meetings the singing went on at all hours in all quarters of the camp grounds. My mother was Maude Dove Richey Gillan.

When she was thirteen years old she joined the Baptist Church at one of these festive meetings and was baptized along with several others in the waters of the Fish Ritter Millpond in the year 1903.

Other things were discussed as well at these wondrous occasions. John Thomas Gilliland and some other ardent foxhunters talked to their revival speaker and their "heavenly music" and wondered if he had ever heard such divine melodious strains.

This particular minister was a wonderful man and a great mixer with every person in the campgrounds. He was new to Kentucky and had been reared and schooled in the eastern states. After being invited to hear the "heavenly music" he was greatly excited and declared he would join the foxhunters on any night of their choosing. A night was agreed upon as well as a gathering spot where the chase would begin. The hunters calculated from this point that everyone could enjoy plenty of the music.

The hounds were gathered at the general store at Mount Herman. The minister watched every move and was all in earnest. As darkness fell the dogs were released and a warm fire was built. John Thomas had brought Burley and Bluebird and before long "Burr" opened with a great voice on a fresh trail over near Skaggs Creek. In a moment a great chorus of the other dogs voice their approval that it was a fresh new trail.

As the hunters glanced from one to another in the light of the fire they voiced their approval of the quality of each hound's voice and the sweetness of the music. The hounds grew closer and their voiced grew more intense. Almost forgotten, someone turned to the preacher and asked if he heard the sweet music? He hesitated and replied, "I'm trying --- I'm trying, but I just can't quite make it out yet."

Suddenly, the chase tightened up considerably and the continuity and intensity f each yelp became like a great chorus of many voices ---- some low in pitch and others higher. It was spectacular. The owner of each hound was thrilled beyond description.

Finally, John turned to the dear bewildered churchman who was straining every nerve to hear the divine strains he sought so seriously. He said, "Dear brother, can't you hear that "heavenly music"?"

The minister, almost in tears, replied, "Ya know, I believe I could hear that music if those dang dogs would quiet down just a little bit."

John Thomas died in the Spring of 1929 and after the death of Hayden Trigg, the state of Kentucky named a county for this illustrious man.

Things have a way of happening like that over along Skaggs Creek in Barren County.

WARNING - GENEALOGY POX

Very Contagious to Adults

SYMPTOMS:

Continual complaint as to need for names, dates, and places.
Patient has blank expression, sometimes deaf to spouse and children.
Has no taste for work of any kind, except feverishly looking through records at libraries and courthouses. Has compulsion to write letters.
Swears at mail carrier when he or she doesn't leave mail.
Frequents strange places such as cemeteries, ruins, and remote, desolate county areas.
Makes secret night calls. Hides phone bills from spouse.
Mumbles to self. Has strange, faraway look in eyes.

THERE IS NO KNOWN CURE!

TREATMENT:

Medication is useless. Disease is not fatal but gets progressively worse.
Patient should attend genealogy workshops, subscribe to genealogical magazines, and be given a quiet corner in the house where he or she can be alone.

REMARKS:

The unusual nature of this disease is that the sicker the patient gets, the more he or she enjoys it.

Our Elders Are Passing

by Jack M. Williams - Submitted by Barb Fausett

Our elders are passing, one by one
Surely gone forever, until there are none.
Their bountiful memories, their knowledge of the past,
Soon will be lost, and beyond our grasp.

The past is prologue, so delicate to retain,
Slipping slowly from our grasp, til nothing remains.
For our elders are passing, so sad but true,
And with them their memories, and all that they knew.

It's urgent for sure, to record each thought,
Of every family elder, so its not for naught.
So generations remember the beauteous past,
We'll retain that knowledge, and ensure it will last.

There'll be no better time, than that right now,
To begin your quest, or to renew your vow.
So locate your elders, and schedule that meeting,
In light of the fact, that time is so fleeting.
